Knudsen Asks Great Step - U.S. States' Arms Output

Automotive Industry Urged To Make Deliveries Worth Over Five Billions In 1942

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—(AP)—William S. Knudsen called on the United States automotive industry today to make deliveries this year of $5,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000 worth of weapons and war goods.

Led Heroic Escape

The director general of the office of production management told reporters during a news conference today that 500 automobile makers with labor leaders and government officials, "everybody" expressed willingness to co-operate in a program for converting virtually the entire industry to war output.

"I told them that before Pearl Harbor they were scheduled to deliver $2,000,000,000 in military goods by the end of 1942, now I'm asking the industry to make it between $5,000,000,000 and $6,000,000,000."

Creation of a new overall labor-management committee from the automobile industry to advise the government on problems of plant conversion, production speed-up, tooling, retaining of workers, pooling of military orders and sub-contracting, was expected.

Canada Coasts To Come Under Allied Command

Under for a sector of assault on German-held Europe.

The Canadian Allied military force is understood in Ottawa to be made up of the following: five naval speedboats, the party played hide and seek with Japanese in a series of engagements that lasted four days off the south China coast. They finally reached safety near the East river.

could withstand a siege and that provisions and money would be well conserved for the glory of the people and the exhaustion of the enemy forces. His remarks to mind another which appeared in the Soviet press recently under the signature of Col. Gregory Borkov, a member of the Soviet air mission to America. In general, Col. Borkov's observations were laudatory but he found the American troops enjoying "too many conveniences."

These views reflect the rather common attitude in this country where it is felt that the Americans must go through a painful learning process and must put a lower price on life, if they are to face up successfully to such hard-fought battles as the Germans and Japanese.

It is hard to guess at the motive behind these articles but there is no reason to suppose that they are any change in Soviet policy. They are accompanied in the Soviet press by other articles extremely friendly in nature.

This week's issue of the Moscow News, which has just resumed publication in Kuibyshev after evacuating from the capital, prints a long article by America by A. Troshchinsky.

BACKS TO WALL

Heater, it is to be remembered that the Russians have been fighting with their backs to the wall for six months. They have not only defended their major cities, they have burned and destroyed enterprises of great national importance rather than permit them to fall into the hands of the enemy. The resentment against Mottley's decision to declare itself an open city grows out of these considerations.

Damage, few civilian casualties, and practically no disruption of essential services.

Announcements of the battalions had landed near to Singapore during the week-end coincided with dispatches from the Japanese that they had gained ground in their effort to win control of Borneo by effecting a landing at Weston on the northwest coast.

Weston is about 170 miles north of Miri, Sarawak, where the Japanese first gained a foothold on the island Dec. 17. Since then they have captured Kuching, capital of Sarawak.

The confidence disclosed by the British withdrawal in north-western Malaya did not say where the new Imperial defence lines had been established, though it mentioned that Japanese patrol activity in southern Japanese state, the border of which at one point is 240 miles from Singapore.

The previous line had been established between the Malay coast, which enters Malacca Strait about 150 miles from this vital naval base.

The British command said the Japanese had paid a heavy toll of casualties at the price of their advance.

Further Japanese activity off the west coast of Malaya, where the invaders previously had attempted to land, was reported. British planes heavily attacked Japanese boats along the coast, a communiqué said, but poor visibility made the results unobtainable.

CLAIM CONQUEST

The Japanese radio claimed that the conquest of Perak state already had been completed. The Japanese forces, pushing on southward, were within 100 miles of the strategically important second city of Malaya, Ipoh, a communiqué said, which was the capital of Selangor and 200 miles from Singapore.

London Admiralty Issues Denial Of Japanese Claim

LONDON, Jan. 5.—(AP)—The admiralty categorically denied Sunday Tokyo claims a large number of British warships had been captured by Japanese troops in Hong Kong.

It has been noted that an admiralty press release, that statements made by the enemy claim that a large number of British warships were destroyed or fell into Japanese hands at the surrender of Hong Kong.

These enemy claims vary considerably from those reported by our naval forces in Hong Kong, which were confined to a few small vessels, mostly auxiliaries.

Truck Becomes Ambulance

This piece of American lease-and-lend equipment is now being used by British armored forces. It is a scout car that has been converted into an ambulance for use with the tanks of an armored division. It has a fine cross-country performance, says the British censor-approved caption. New arrangements between Britain, the United States and Canada, now under discussion, may use this and similar equipment pooled by the Allies and given outright as part of the campaign to whip all the Axis everywhere.

The communiqué declared 500 additional prisoners had been rounded up at Halfaya, and the total captured there to 7,500.

MELBOURNE, Australia, Jan. 5.—Emergency measures were announced by the government today to strengthen home defence.

Minister Arthur Drakeford announced that the Royal Australian Air Force would be built up to 10,000 aircraft.

And that the government would take care to see that the number of competent pilots required to man national air defences would be maintained.

At the same time, he said, Australia's commitment under the Empire Air Training Scheme was being examined.

(This would imply that Australia might reduce the number of men provided for training in the Empire Air Training Scheme.)

It was announced also that about 50 more officers of the Australian Imperial Force now serving in the Middle East would be recalled to Australia to assist in training Australian troops in methods of modern warfare for home defence.

BEVERLY HILL, CALIF. (AP)—Three officers on the staff of Military District 19 are leaving shortly to take special courses in Eastern Canada.

At the Dietrich Depot, will attend the school of aviation at St. John's, Quebec, for one month.

Capt. L. B. Yule, G.S.O., will report to the Royal Canadian Air Force, Kingston, for a special 60-day course.

German in a single cavity at last.

From sector after sector along the battlements the Russian command sent out captured axes, bayonets, resistance and heavy tank losses.

The Russians announced the recapture of Borovsk, 80 miles southwest of Moscow and 25 miles west of Moshak, along with a number of smaller places designated only as "inhabited localities."

The Soviet Bureau of Information said that at least the Germans captured 25 machine guns, 17 mortars, 25 heavy machine guns, 50 anti-tank rifles, 70 torpedoes, 300 bicycles, and documents of a German infantry division.

On other sectors, the communiqué added, the Russian killed 1,750 of the enemy and wounded 5,000. The planes, 185 trucks, eight tanks and many guns.

VIEWING THE situation along the entire front with availing confidence, the Soviet army newspaper Star declared "fine prospects are open to our troops."

"We have a chance of depriving the Germans of all advantages they now possess."

The recapture of Borovsk followed two days after the recapture of Kaluzhsk, 274 machine guns, 150 trucks, eight tanks and many guns.

The steady progress gave weight to a Red army declaration this week-end that the Germans were being driven back from Moscow.

At least three (three as far as they had advanced).

Dorothy Dix Says:

Probably all parents would admit that they would not want to be in their children's shoes if they could, but in trying to do this they bring upon themselves the coldest, darkest, cruellest hardships than the ones from which they are trying to protect them. For life isn't a pathway strewn with roses; it is a hard and rocky road to travel. There is no possibility in life in which we can have the love from being pierced by its thorns and broken down by its stones and the softer we make our children the less able they are to endure the sufferings that they are going to be called upon to bear, and the more danger there is of their fainting and falling by the wayside.

Nothing is more common than to hear a successful, well-to-do man say: "I came up the hard way, but, thank God, my children will never have to struggle as I have." Or a mother will say: "I don't want my girls to have to work and be denied pretty clothes and good times as I was when I was young. I want them to be carefree and able to eat and enjoy themselves."

And the parents are happy in making slaves of themselves for their children because they believe that they are securing their children's future well-being.

Yet we are all daily witnesses to the futility of parents trying to protect their children, instead of teaching them how to protect themselves. We have seen the fortunes piled up by one generation wasted by the next and children being brought by the hand. We have seen the weak-willed and under-foot by the strong. The spoiled and pampered children who never get up from their beds when their husbands and wives who wouldn't admit to be a mother did, but expected them to do it, and the adults instead of howling babies.

And we wonder still more that parents do not teach their children what the world is really like, what they will have to learn to do and take in order to hold their own in it, instead of leading them to believe that, somehow, they will drift through it on flowers of ease.

For the only way in which parents can protect their children is to give them courage, strength and discipline. Champion prizefighters are not trained on silken couches and fed on lollypops.

Your Baby And Mine

This early in a new year we usually still feel as if we had a baby. A shampoo, a manicure and a new frock with slippage, and everything is so new and shining and full of promise. For the moment these facts are an array of days unmarred by mistakes, unmarred by tears or even recriminations.

But for the moment, we can tell ourselves that one more year has brought us additional wisdom. We have discovered, if not in the exact time, that people like us when we like them. It's a simple but infallible recipe for happiness. Because of that we are determined this year to think of the things that we like in ourselves in all persons and overlook the faults. We are too full of ourselves to do that.

This year, despite all the talk of hatred, we try to keep our self free of it. Because we have discovered that the more we are we shall keep our faces rigidly to our goals and not disfigure our features by having hatred poured in concentrated portions at our arch enemy. Hatred poisons us, makes us weak, light-headed, incapable of doing anything that we should be quick and strong and invincible, we are too full of ourselves to do that.

Snow Birds Are Hungry For Prawn Foods

By MRS. GAYNOR MADDOX
Young people who ski and sled and play hard in the snow need great quantities of hot nourishing food when they come indoors. That does not mean they must have expensive meats and fancy dishes.

Women Laborers Enjoy Their Work

LONDON, Jan. 8 (CP)—Widening a pick and shovel and a job for any person with soft hands and a weak spine, but the women employed as laborers in the West of England like their lot of it. The women, including Lacy Seymour, wife of Sir Lancelot Seymour, baronet, are assistant underground daily do not multi-patched overalls, shoulder a shovel or pick and join a gang of navvies, clearing land on the site of a proposed air-drome.

Lacy Seymour, mother of three children, admitted the work was hard, but she said she was "very busy" because "we feel we are really doing important work." "Everybody is very busy," she said, "and we have been told we work at least as well as men, but not than."

McCoy Health Service

Many special modifications of diet treatment have been worked out—many that I will not have the space to describe all of them. However I will take up as many as possible. Probably the simplest kind of special diet is the milk diet used in the treatment of stomach ulcers. This special diet has excellent results, producing a rapid healing of the ulcer, and the patient usually gets along very well on it when the taking of the ordinary mixed diet causes great discomfort.

Another special diet of use is referred to as a high roughage diet. This is used principally in the treatment of chronic constipation, which the colon is relaxed and lax.

The aim is to provide the colon with large amounts of roughage obtained chiefly from vegetables. The patient is allowed a very liberal use of raw and cooked vegetables, given steamed fruits such as prunes, figs and apples, and is given whole-wheat bread, oatmeal, and a moderate amount of meat. A dish of the cooked vegetables may be beneficial. The bland diet may be helpful in colitis when it is desirable to provide a soft, non-irritating residue. The usual bland diet calls for milk, eggs, cream, white bread, smooth cereals, macaroni, potatoes, pudding, cream soup, etc., and it has been my experience that it may create an acidosis which must later be corrected.

In the modified form of this diet I suggest that the patient avoid raw flour foods for a time and that the cooked vegetables be finely minced or pureed. The patient usually needs to avoid fruit again. When the patient with colitis or with an irritated colon follows such a regimen for a time the intestinal irritation will often subside in a satisfactory way through the use of this modified bland diet.

Sometimes the patient requests a diet for the express purpose of correcting that type of acidosis brought about through the use of the acid-forming foods. May then be provided with a base-forming diet. In such a diet, the alkaline-forming foods are fed in abundance and the acid-forming foods such as meat, eggs and cereals are cut down to the minimum. The foods most likely to be helpful are the fruits and vegetables. Among the vegetables, potatoes are included.

All questions regarding Health and Diet will be answered. Large stamped, self-addressed envelope must be enclosed. Write on one side of paper only. Letters must not exceed 150 words. Address: McCoy Health Service, 1151 West 6th St., Los Angeles, Calif.

FOR VALOUR

COLIN BARRON, V.C.

Throughout the First German War there was no battle scene where human courage had to rise higher, where the British soldier's fortitude was more harshly tried and his valourous spirit was more weighed down by mud, rain and weariness, than in the battle in the Bog, which was Passchendaele.

There was little to inspire great deeds and spectacular episodes of arms in this shell-strewn sea of slime where the Canadians fought for a foothold on Passchendaele Ridge. The unceasing, dull autumn rains cut a general pall of gloom over the caving, mud-walled trench-world, and the dead-weary men who struggled through the desolate waste of water-filled craters would have been forgiven if they had been at their lowest ebb of heart and morale.

It is to the eternal honor of the Australian, New Zealand, British and Canadian soldiers that they were often able to rise high above mere duty in that desperate fight in the mud. They seemed to discover new and unplumbed springs of courage and defiance within them to answer the combined challenge of the enemy and the elements. At Passchendaele, under conditions so terrible that Ludendorff described them as "not short of suffering unpleasant," a number of Canadian officers and men achieved what, perhaps, the most glorious series of heroic deeds that is recorded in the battle-story of the Canadian Corps.

It was in that dispiriting fight in which all hopes for dash and swift-moving action should have been bogged down and dissipated in the rain and gloom, that Corporal Colin Barron, a powerful, broad-shouldered young Lewis-gunner of the 3rd Canadian Battalion, first displayed a heavily-manned German machine-gun nest and then went berserk among the crews.

attack (Nov. 6, 1917), which had jumped off at six a.m. under the usual steady drizzle. The Battalion's most formidable obstacle was a redoubt manned by the infamous three machine-guns, and built amid the stone foundations of a walled farm-house. It was known in Operation Orders and on military maps as "Vine Cottage," though the veritable cottage had long since vanished under the prolonged battering and the mud.

Two previous major attempts to advance the line in the area had been held up and then blocked in front of Vine Cottage. For a week moments, with Barron using the bayonet and clubbed butt of an old rifle he had picked up, with terrible effect. He killed or wounded every man in two machine-gun crews. As the third crew boiled in terror from the mud and blood-splashed Canadian, the supporting German infantry broke with them. As they streamed back, Barron mounted the parapet and turned their own Maxim on them, achieving more execution and preventing quick recovery from their panic.

With the strong-point captured through Corporal Barron's long-handed fight and great gallantry, the whole assaulting line was able to sweep forward. As the official destruction of the strong-point had been the object of both Canadian infantry and artillery. Shells bounced off it, or harmlessly exploded in the sudden earth, with even the sound of their burst muffled and smothered. It stubbornly held out to exact a terrible toll from minor attacks and renderers trying to encircle it or bomb it into silence. Now it threatened to slow, or even halt, a third major assault by stopping the 3rd Battalion in its tracks. A dangerous situation was already developing on the unit's flank.

It was then that the young Scottish-Canadian "rose magnificently to the occasion." Barron led his Lewis-gun crew on a precarious passage of open ground to reach a flank. They made it without being observed by the redoubt's machine-gunners. Then, completely exposing himself to their almost point-blank fire, Barron opened his Lewis-gun on them with sharp bursts. Two Maxims were silenced in the short furious dash, as their startled crews took cover. The third gun, blocked from Barron's view, hummed on, keeping a full company pinned down.

Before the German machine-gunners of the two nearest Maxims could recover from their surprise, Barron told his crew to cover him as best they could and with reckless impetuosity charged into the redoubt alone. There was a wild melee in the confined space of the strong-post for a few moments, with Barron using the bayonet and clubbed butt of an old rifle he had picked up, with terrible effect. He killed or wounded every man in two machine-gun crews. As the third crew boiled in terror from the mud and blood-splashed Canadian, the supporting German infantry broke with them. As they streamed back, Barron mounted the parapet and turned their own Maxim on them, achieving more execution and preventing quick recovery from their panic.

British War Chiefs Study Plans In Washington
